The Java Data Mining API

Data Mining is a very important process used by most companies today. Grouping and analyzing data from disparate data sources is becoming more and more of a problem. This is where the Java Data Mining API or JDM fits in. The JDM, currently awaiting the approval ballot, proposes a pure Java API for developing data mining applications.

Each of us, as Java programmers will encounter situations where choices must be made between various coding solutions. Should tabular data be sorted in one way or another? What exactly is the graphical layout of your HTML pages? How often should you poll a queue? To better understand what choices to make Keld discusses the various ways you may enter parameters to your Java programs.
